

Facial and Paw reflex therapy for pets

BY Christian Johnsen

The course MIKURADOG offer the necessary knowledge and techniques to form you professionally as a Facial and Paw reflex therapist for small animals, an activity with great future in the market.

Its content and structure has been elaborated by a team of professionals that combine the most modern techniques with a wide experience on this field. Also in the use of natural remedies and diet for dogs and cats and offers assessment after finishing the complete course.

This course is addressed to all those people who like animals and want to become a professional in complementary VET therapies for pets and small animals.

To assist this course it is not necessary to have any previous knowledge.

We teach techniques as Facial and Paw Reflexology, and acupressure. These methodologies deal with the healing of the body by certain changes. For example, it can stimulate the nerves, increase the blood flow, avoid muscular spasms, and cause hormonal discharge as endorphins (that control the pain), and cortisol (natural steroid). These are some of the physiological effects most known in reflexology. By combining manual therapies with homeopathy, vitamins and minerals, diet, etc., remarkable and healthier results can be achieved, and thus get a better health and life quality for the animal in a non toxic and natural way.

In dogs and cats, some of the following problems can be treated with reflexology:

- Muscle-skeleton problems
- Skin problems
- Respiratory problems
- Gastrointestinal problems
- Reproductive problems
- Nervous system problems

Besides all the advantages mentioned above, regular treatments of reflexology can treat minor lesions in animals used in sports, helping them to be more resistant to injuries and to take better care of their muscle and sinewy structures. In the sports world, professional and amateur, we often use reflexotherapy as part of the routine of their training.
